Osipova N.G. Market fundamentalism as the source of global social inequalities

Osipova G. - Doctor of Sociology, Professor, Dean of Faculty of Sociology of Lomonosov Moscow State University. 119234, Russian Federation, Moscow, Leninsky Gory 1-33, MGU, Faculty of Sociology. Tel.: +7-495-939-46-98. E-mail: soc@socio.msu.ru

Abstract. In this article, the market fundamentalism discusses as the ideological basis of global social inequality. The author develops and complements the hypothesis that market fundamentalism is the result of the process of a peculiar transformation of the political ideology of liberalism into totalitarian dogma. The theoretical basis of such transformation, its specific mechanisms and global social consequences described in details. The mechanism by which the ideology of classical liberalism, the key values of which were freedom, reason, tolerance, justice and equality, has become its antipode - ideological doctrine shown. This doctrine raises market competition to the rank of the highest social values. Its aim is the destruction of social morality and spirituality and contribution to the emergence of new forms of global social inequality.

Key words. Social inequality, global social inequality, the phenomenon of fundamentalism, religious and market fundamentalism, early liberalism, liberalism of the twentieth century, a multidimensional approach to social inequality, resource inequality, existential inequality, vital inequality.
